

NEWS

Katie Couric's new memoir vividly describes Jeffrey Epstein's 'creepy' home where he hosted Prince Andrew for an intimate dinner party

By Joshua Nelken-Zitser

+ Follow

AP Photos

Have an account? Log in

Unlimited access.
Unlimited possibility.

Learn more | Go Ad-free

14-day
Free Trial

67% off

Annual

$49

"Going There," an upcoming memoir by veteran journalist Katie Couric, vividly details a dinner party hosted by Jeffrey Epstein and attended by Prince Andrew that took place in December 2010, according to a manuscript obtained by the Daily Mail.

Couric reportedly describes Epstein's $75 million New York townhouse as "Eyes Wide Shut with a twist" in the memoir, referring to Stanley Kubrick's 1999 movie about a secret society that hosts masked orgies.

She describes the interior as "creepy chandeliers and body-part art,' the Daily Mail reported.

Guests, including Prince Andrew and Couric herself, ate lasagne out of shallow bowls at the party, which took place just months after Epstein served a 13-month sentence for procuring a child for prostitution and soliciting a prostitute, the journalist reportedly writes in the memoir.

Epstein then "held court" in front of the fireplace to the likes of Chelsea Handler and Woody Allen, per the Daily Mail.

"I couldn't imagine what Epstein and Andrew were up to, apart from trying to cultivate friends in the media," Couric reportedly writes in the memoir. "Which, in retrospect, they must have figured they'd need when the pedophilia charges started rolling in."

Have an account?

Unlimited access.
Unlimited possibility.

Learn more |

14-day

Free Trial

67% off

Annual

$49

This story is available exclusively to Business Insider subscribers. Become an Insider and start reading now. Have an account? Log in.

Have an account?

Unlimited access.
Unlimited possibility.

Learn more |

14-day
Free Trial

67% off

Annual

$49